

Vocabulary Exercise Story

Fear was pervasive throughout the classroom as Mr.B handed out the tests. He put a thick stack of paper on Nancy's desk penultimately. For her Mr.B's class was typically a soporific place for her, but not today. She had forgotten to study before so whether or not she passes the test is entirely aleatory. Her teacher had a certain asperity to his attitude. It was always unimpeachable when he had a bad day. She turned to her friend Mandy from across the room to allay her stress, who offered a hortatory smile in return. With that the test had begun, she stared at the first problem which was a short story that she would have to give an exegesis for. The story was about a girl who went to the amusement park with her mom, the story described all of the different provocative rollercoasters and snacks she got. Nancy had to point out all of the spelling errors and correct them. She remembered most of the material but found herself getting lost many times. By the end, she realized that if she wanted to get better grades she would have to take studying seriously.
